

The peasants came out and started working on the Great Wall of GMARS. Here 32 feet of the 57-foot wall is erected.

At least the posts started out straight

View back towards the Telescope Field. I can already hear Alson commanding "Activated Deflector Shield!"

Tarps go up for the night to test the shield

View from the center of Aragon's pad of the shield. The last two sections will cover the end of the pads and most of the field. Brad's response was to not turn on the offending light Saturday night. Instead, he turned on the now brighter light by his corral, which still spills onto the Telescope Field. Current plans are to finish putting up the last two poles at next weekend's Star Party. Will Brad continue to turn off the light in his driveway? Can pigs fly?
